

Who is quarterbacking your financial team?

You have the experts. What you may not have is one plan they all run.

POST COPY — READY TO PASTE

A quick audit for my fellow Anderson alumni. You have a CPA. An estate attorney (maybe). An insurance agent. A broker, or a robo. A banker. A realtor.

Now — who is the one person who has all six running the same play?

For most successful people in their 40s and 50s the honest answer is: "Me, at 11 pm, between everything else."

That is the gap Wealth Advisory Now fills. We don't replace your professionals. We quarterback them — one plan, every expert aligned to it, nothing falling through the cracks.

What we quarterback for our clients:

- Tax — we bring the proactive strategy (entity & compensation structure, Roth conversions, tax-efficient withdrawals, 401(k) and defined benefit plan design) and coordinate execution with your CPA.
- Estate — beneficiary and account-titling audits, a document inventory and trust coordination your attorney can act on.
- Insurance & risk — an objective coverage-gap analysis before anyone sells you a policy.
- Investments — a portfolio X-ray, fee and concentration-risk review across every account, including old 401(k)s and stock options.
- Real estate & lending — how properties, mortgages and business credit fit the plan, so no decision is made in isolation.
- Retirement & the next generation — income sequencing, Social Security timing, college funding, and how the business eventually sells or transfers.

You learned in ops class that value leaks at the hand-offs. Your financial life is no different. Having a wealth architect who owns the whole board means fewer blind spots, clearer decisions and a sounding board who actually knows your situation.

If any of your six aren't talking to each other, message me — the first conversation is on us.

The Quarterback Model

You already have professionals. We make them a team — coordinated around a single plan, with your best interest as the play call.

What you gain

Fewer blind spots, because someone sees every account and every decision. Faster decisions, because the plan already answers most questions. Your time back, because the coordination is our job, not your late-night one.

How it starts

A complimentary review: a professional report on your current portfolio, the gaps and blind spots we see, and the options to close them. No obligation — you keep the report either way.
